Dear Jacobs Hiring Team,

A training program only earns its keep if it changes what people can actually do—and, for a sales-enablement role, whether they adopt the tool and the workflow. That belief is the through-line of my work, and it's what drew me to a Learning & Training Lead role focused on building role-based curriculums for Salesforce CRM adoption across the Growth & Sales Advancement team. With a master's in Applied Organizational Psychology, I treat learning design as research: find where the real capability gaps are, build the experience that closes them, drive adoption through change management, then check the data to see if it landed.

This is the work I do now at InGenius Prep. I run needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders to surface learning gaps, design new programs around them, and facilitate live and virtual training for 600+ participants—then refine each program through feedback analysis. I also build the connective tissue around learning: guides, curriculums, and workflows for 70+ cross-functional staff that cut onboarding time by 75%, plus the day-to-day coordination of 20+ programs and 10+ vendors. Partnering across functions and measuring program effectiveness are central to how I work, which maps directly to the cross-functional, data-driven approach this role describes.

A couple of my strongest stories are about driving adoption through people, not mandates. At Vestas Wind Systems, I piloted an Inclusive Leadership workshop for 12 senior leaders and scaled it to 23 other locations by building belief and following up until it stuck—the same change-management muscle a CRM rollout needs. At NextGen Healthcare, I analyzed 2,000+ employee survey responses, found manager effectiveness was the top engagement driver, and consulted with leaders on the training that followed. Designing curriculum with subject-matter experts, tracking effectiveness, and optimizing on the data are already core parts of my day.

I want to be candid about fit. The role centers on Salesforce CRM, and my hands-on CRM experience is with HubSpot rather than Salesforce—so I'd be coming up to speed on the Salesforce platform, though the enablement craft (needs assessment, curriculum design, blended/virtual delivery, adoption-focused change management, and impact measurement) transfers directly. With roughly three years building and delivering training programs and a genuine bias toward measuring what works, I'd be glad to bring that to Jacobs' Sales Advancement team. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
