Hiring Manager

Aurora

Pittsburgh, PA / Mountain View, CA

People program management isn't just about running programs—from my experience, it's about taking a messy people problem, asking the right diagnostic questions, building something structured around the answer, and tracking whether it actually changed anything. With a background in HR, Organizational Development, and Program Management, I have helped organizations move from ambiguous people challenges to measurable outcomes—managing 15+ programs end-to-end and building feedback systems that enabled C-suite to prioritize essential organizational needs. I look forward to bringing my program lifecycle expertise, stakeholder diagnostic skills, and data-driven iteration approach to Aurora as a Program Manager, People Team.

At InGenius Prep, I managed the full lifecycle of 20+ programs—from stakeholder needs assessments through vendor coordination, delivery, and feedback-driven iteration. I built the cross-functional documentation and processes for 70+ staff, which meant I wasn't just running programs but designing the systems that made them repeatable. When something wasn't working, I traced it back through feedback data from 25+ global stakeholders and built the fix into the next program cycle.

My OD consulting work with Transition Projects Inc. added a diagnostic dimension: I ran stakeholder discovery interviews with a CEO and HR leadership team to identify root causes of a people problem, then translated those findings into a year-round engagement and communications plan. That process—problem framing, diagnosis, program design, execution—is exactly what People PM work requires.

As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Aurora's mission to deploy self-driving technology at scale, and the complexity that comes with a fast-moving People function, are both draws. I'm open to relocating to Pittsburgh or Mountain View for the right role. Thank you for considering my application—I look forward to discussing how I can best contribute to Aurora!

Sincerely,
