Training and development isn't just about delivering content—from my experience, it's about understanding what people actually need to do their jobs, designing something clear and practical, and following up with data to see if it worked. With a background in HR, Organizational Development, and Program Management, I have helped organizations build training infrastructure from the ground up—driving a 78% enrollment rate across 15+ program launches and reducing onboarding ramp-up time by 75% through needs-based design. I look forward to bringing my curriculum development expertise, operational discipline, and evidence-informed facilitation approach to Pacific Seafood as a Training and Development Specialist.

At InGenius Prep, I built training delivery infrastructure end-to-end: needs assessments with 25+ global stakeholders that identified real learning gaps, guides and workflows that reduced onboarding time by 75%, and webinars for 600+ participants. Managing 15+ programs and 10+ vendors simultaneously meant I also learned the operational discipline that keeps training calendars running—scheduling, logistics, LMS administration, and tracking effectiveness through feedback loops.

My consulting work with Transition Projects Inc. added the data analysis dimension: I helped an HR team audit 300+ leave cases and translate that data into policy recommendations, including first aid training that directly addressed a root cause we'd identified. That kind of evidence-informed approach to training design is something I carry into every program I build.

As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Pacific Seafood's scale and the real operational stakes of distribution training are both challenges I'd welcome. I'm based in Portland and available for onsite work in Clackamas. Thank you for considering my application—I look forward to discussing how I can best contribute to Pacific Seafood!

Sincerely,
