Dear Chime Hiring Team,

Performance effectiveness isn't just about scoring a team—from my experience, it's about a continuous cycle of building the right measurement framework, reading the data honestly, and partnering across stakeholders to turn insight into accountability and improvement. With a background in program management, vendor partnership, and data-driven reporting, I'm excited to bring that approach to Chime's Member Experience organization.

At InGenius Prep, I partner with 10+ vendors and Marketing, Tech, and Sales teams to drive accountability and continuous improvement across 20+ programs. I build reporting and review materials from program metrics and stakeholder feedback that surface trends and improvement opportunities, and I establish cross-functional processes for 70+ staff that reduced onboarding time by 75%. Managing distributed partners against shared performance expectations is the core of my day-to-day.

At NextGen Healthcare, I led a manager effectiveness initiative that translated 2,000+ feedback responses into scorecards and executive-ready reports that directly shaped strategy. That work is the closest analog to building performance scorecards and leadership review materials—diagnosing with data first, then recommending what to change.

At Organization Development Network (ODN) Oregon, I facilitate discovery and stakeholder interviews to diagnose performance drivers, and I've upskilled a team to audit 300+ cases and quantify costs, using data analysis to refute assumptions and drive process change. That diagnostic, evidence-first habit is exactly what spotting trends across audits and operational reporting requires.

This is how I approach work—uniquely grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC): I diagnose with data to find where performance breaks down, collaborate cross-functionally on solutions, and track key metrics to ensure progress holds. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Chime's mission that everyone can achieve financial progress—and the chance to raise the bar on how teams perform for members—are both real draws. I'd love to bring this methodology to your team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
