Dear Lyft Hiring Team,

Process excellence isn't just about writing the standard—from my experience, it's about a continuous cycle of governing the documentation, auditing whether the field actually follows it, and refining the process through cross-functional collaboration until execution and the standard match. With a background in program management, SOP governance, and audit-driven improvement, I'm excited to bring that to Lyft's Process Excellence & Standards team.

At InGenius Prep, I manage the document library, SOPs, and version control across 20+ programs and 100+ operational standards, and I oversee the end-to-end lifecycle of process updates from intake through implementation. I partner across Marketing, Tech, and Sales teams and 10+ vendors to assess adherence and align stakeholders, and I establish metrics and documentation that reduced onboarding time by 75%. Owning a governed standards library and driving updates through to field adoption is the core of my work.

At Organization Development Network (ODN) Oregon, I facilitate discovery and stakeholder interviews to design audit cycles that validate standards against actual practice, and I've upskilled a team to audit 300+ cases and quantify costs, using data analysis to refute assumptions and drive process change. That audit-and-validate loop is exactly what keeps standards honest.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I assisted in employee relations cases ensuring compliance and directed an M&A project that required migrating records across systems with strict version control—formative practice in regulated, detail-intolerant operations.

This is how I approach work—uniquely grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC): I diagnose with data to find where execution drifts from the standard, collaborate cross-functionally on corrective and preventive solutions, and track metrics to ensure improvements hold. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Lyft's purpose to serve and connect—and the chance to build process governance that scales across markets and partners—are both genuine draws. I'd love to bring this methodology to your team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
