Dear Nike Hiring Team,

Great learning and development isn't just about building programs—from my experience, it's a continuous cycle of defining clear outcomes, designing and piloting solutions with cross-functional partners, and using feedback and data to make them better over time. With a background in program enablement, organizational development, and a master's in Applied Organizational Psychology, I'm excited to bring that approach to Nike as a Lead, Learning & Development Advisor.

At InGenius Prep, I lead strategic learning initiatives end to end—needs assessment, design, pilot, and launch—partnering across cross-functional stakeholders and 8+ vendors and managing the timelines and budgets that keep them on track. I run needs assessments with 25+ global stakeholders to define learning outcomes, build the guides and workflows that support 70+ staff (cutting onboarding time 75%), and assess qualitative and quantitative feedback from 600+ webinar participants to refine solutions against intended outcomes—holding a 78% enrollment rate. This curate-build-test-launch-sustain cycle is exactly how I work.

At NextGen Healthcare, I focused squarely on manager and leadership development—delivering training for managers on Inclusive Leadership and performance review, and leading a manager-effectiveness initiative that turned 2,000+ responses into reports shaping leadership strategy. At Vestas Wind Systems, I launched an Inclusive Leadership workshop that scaled to 23 global locations—an early lesson in designing manager development that travels globally and adapts locally.

I'll be candid: this is a senior, global-strategy role, and my title isn't "Lead" yet. But the work it describes—owning learning initiatives end to end, developing people-manager capability, and improving solutions with data—is the work I already do, and I bring deep grounding in how adults actually learn. My approach comes from my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC): I diagnose with data, collaborate cross-functionally on solutions, and track metrics to ensure impact. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, I'd be thrilled to bring this to Nike's people-development work—and as a Portland local, the opportunity is especially exciting. I'd welcome the chance to talk.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
