Dear Stanford University Hiring Team,

HR business partnering isn't just about resolving individual people issues—from my experience, it's about using data and cross-functional collaboration to advise managers wisely and build the people infrastructure that lets teams perform their best. With a background spanning HRBP support, employee-relations work, and organizational development, I'm excited to bring that mix of analytical rigor and genuine people investment to Stanford's Vice Provost for Student Affairs as a Human Resources Business Partner.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I worked directly alongside the HRBP team, delivering strategic HR solutions across employee relations, headcount, and succession planning, and assisting on ER cases while ensuring compliance with labor law. I learned firsthand how to coach managers, balance policy with business needs, and handle sensitive matters with discretion. I also helped pilot an Inclusive Leadership workshop for senior leaders that scaled to 23 global locations—exactly the kind of advisory-plus-development partnering this role calls for.

At InGenius Prep, I apply those instincts to program operations—managing the end-to-end lifecycle for 20+ projects, facilitating listening sessions with 25 global stakeholders, and building documentation for 70+ cross-functional staff that reduced onboarding time by 75%. The underlying work is the same as great HR partnering: synthesizing people feedback into action, guiding teams through change, and keeping stakeholders aligned.

At NextGen Healthcare, I led a manager-effectiveness initiative, analyzing 2,000+ employee responses and generating reports that directly shaped engagement strategy and C-suite decisions—the kind of standard-reporting and data-driven recommendation work this role values.

My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC)—which trained me to treat people challenges as systems: I diagnose with data, collaborate cross-functionally on solutions, and track metrics to ensure real progress. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, I'm genuinely drawn to Stanford's mission and the chance to partner with managers and staff who are supporting students. I'd love to bring this methodology to your people team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
