Dear Stanford University Hiring Team,

HR operations aren't just about processing transactions accurately—from my experience, they're the foundation of trust: when records, pay, and leave are handled with precision and care, people are free to do their best work. With a background spanning HRBP support, high-volume HR coordination, and a master's in Applied Organizational Psychology, I'm excited to bring that combination of operational rigor and genuine people focus to Stanford as a Sr. HR Support Specialist.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I supported the HR team through detail-heavy, high-stakes work: I directed a Merger & Acquisition project that migrated and merged employee records, optimized onboarding processes across 3 global locations, and assisted on employee-relations cases while maintaining strict compliance and confidentiality of sensitive information. That role taught me to handle personnel data and transactions with the accuracy and discretion this position demands.

At Kronos Research, I worked across the full HR cycle—drafting job descriptions, posting openings, screening, and coordinating recruiting—and grew applications by 566% in two months through careful, personalized candidate communication. That talent-acquisition support, plus standard HRIS-level work across SAP, ADP, and Rippling, maps closely to the postings, screening, and scheduling this role involves.

At InGenius Prep, I now manage end-to-end lifecycles for 20+ projects, processing high-volume coordination and building documentation for 70+ staff that reduced onboarding time by 75%. I'm the kind of person my supervisor calls "the most organized he's ever worked with"—accuracy and follow-through are how I work.

My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC): I diagnose with data, collaborate cross-functionally on solutions, and track metrics to ensure progress. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, I'm genuinely drawn to Stanford's mission and the chance to keep its people operations running cleanly. I'd love to bring this care and precision to your HR team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
