Dear University of Oregon Hiring Team,

Effective training isn't just about delivering a session—from my experience, it's a continuous cycle of understanding what people need, building support in the formats that actually reach them, and refining the experience through feedback and data. With a background in program enablement, organizational development, and a master's in Applied Organizational Psychology, I'm excited to bring that learning-design mindset to the University of Oregon as a Learning and Development Training Specialist.

At InGenius Prep, developing training is the heart of my role. I build learning materials across formats—guides, written procedures, workflows, and instructional videos—and stood up a new training program end to end, hosting live sessions and producing videos that reached 500+ participants. I run needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders to find capability gaps, then design solutions and post-training support that drive adoption and cut onboarding time by 75%. Building dynamic, multi-format learning content and supporting it after launch is already my day-to-day.

At NextGen Healthcare, I delivered internal training on DEI, Inclusive Leadership, and performance review, and led a manager-effectiveness initiative that turned 2,000+ responses into reports shaping engagement strategy. At Vestas Wind Systems, I launched an Inclusive Leadership workshop for senior leaders that scaled to 23 global locations—an early lesson in designing learning that travels across audiences and contexts.

I want to be straightforward: my training work has centered on people and program development rather than IT-systems adoption specifically. But the core craft this role calls for—designing learner-centered materials, working within learning-management systems, and managing training projects—is exactly what I do, and I'm a fast study on new tools and domains. My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC) and undergraduate background in Education Studies: I diagnose with data, collaborate cross-functionally on solutions, and track metrics to ensure learning sticks. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, I'd be glad to bring this to the UO team, and being based in Oregon makes the opportunity especially meaningful.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
