Dear Discord Hiring Team,

Good people analytics isn't just about building a dashboard—from my experience, it's about asking the right question, finding the real signal in messy data, and telling a story clear enough that leaders actually change a decision. With a background spanning organizational research, recruiting, and data analysis, I'm excited to bring that investigative, storytelling-first approach to Discord as a Recruiting Data Analyst.

At NextGen Healthcare, I analyzed 2,000+ data points of employee experience using mixed methods, identified the single biggest driver of engagement, and turned it into a report that reached the C-suite—and that leadership kept referencing even after I left. That's what I love about analytics: not the chart, but the moment the data changes someone's mind. In my ODN consulting work, I helped audit 300+ cases and quantify $362K, using the analysis to overturn assumptions everyone had accepted.

I know the recruiting side too. At Kronos Research, a quantitative trading firm, I tracked recruiting pipeline and analyzed global compensation data; I have hands-on experience in Greenhouse. And I'm genuinely fluent in working with data and AI tools—I've been building a RAG-based system in my own time that reasons over a large body of documents. I'll be candid: my analytics work has lived in advanced Excel, Google Sheets, and SPSS rather than SQL and Tableau. I'm a fast study on new tools and eager to build those skills, and the analytical thinking and recruiting-domain fluency underneath transfer directly.

My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC), where research design was core: I diagnose with data, partner with stakeholders on what to measure, and track the metrics that prove impact. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, the chance to be Discord's strategic data partner for recruiting is a genuine draw. I'd love to talk about how I'd contribute while ramping on your stack.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
