Dear Mercury Hiring Team,

Effective enablement isn't just about building a course—from my experience, it's about diagnosing where people actually struggle, designing learning that meets them there, and measuring whether it changed behavior, then iterating through cross-functional collaboration. With a background spanning L&D, instructional design, and program management, I'm excited to bring that systematic approach to Mercury as a Customer Support Learning & Enablement Specialist.

At InGenius Prep, I run enablement end-to-end: I manage 20+ programs with defined timelines and milestones, facilitate training for 600+ participants, and design content across live sessions, async materials, and SOPs. I also build and maintain the knowledge systems for 70+ staff, auditing and updating materials as products and processes change. One lesson shaped how I work—when a rollout I owned didn't get adopted, I went back, interviewed the users, found the real gap was friction, and built a just-in-time asset that fixed it. Assumption is the most expensive thing in L&D.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I designed and piloted an Inclusive Leadership program that scaled to 23 locations, partnering with a subject-matter expert to build the content, practice exercises, and follow-up reinforcement. At NextGen Healthcare, I analyzed 2,000+ employee experiences and turned the data into reports that informed L&D strategy—so I'm comfortable letting metrics, not gut feel, tell me what's working.

My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC), which trained me to treat learning as a system: I diagnose with data where people fall short of proficiency, collaborate cross-functionally on the intervention, and track behavioral signals—are people actually using what they learned?—to make sure it holds. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Mercury's clarity-first culture and the chance to help your support team reach proficiency faster are both genuine draws. I'd love to bring this methodology to your Enablement team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
