Dear Persona Hiring Team,

Good operations analysis isn't just running the numbers—from my experience, it's treating data integrity as the foundation everyone else's decisions rest on, then building clean, auditable systems and documentation around it. With a background spanning data analysis, program operations, and organizational consulting, I'm excited to bring that careful, detail-obsessed approach to Persona as an Operations Analyst.

At ODN Oregon, I work data-first: I helped audit 300+ leave cases through rigorous analysis and built executive-ready findings on $362K in leave costs, with clean documentation that drove real policy change. I'm the kind of analyst who double-checks, catches discrepancies, and doesn't let things slip—because I know how much downstream trust depends on getting the numbers right.

At InGenius Prep, I own recurring review cycles and operations for 20+ programs: I validate data accuracy, ensure deliverables go out on time, and build and maintain spreadsheet models in Excel and Google Sheets to track performance against plans. I'm also the go-to for inbound questions—triaging promptly and coordinating across Marketing, Tech, and Sales. At Vestas, I managed sensitive compensation and headcount data with the discretion this kind of high-trust role demands. I'll be candid that I haven't owned sales-comp plan design specifically, but the core muscles—accurate modeling, owning a recurring cycle end-to-end, and handling sensitive data calmly—are ones I use constantly, and I learn a new domain fast.

My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC), which trained me to treat operations as a system: I diagnose with data where a process breaks down, collaborate cross-functionally on the fix, and track results to make sure they hold. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Persona's mission to make identity verification trustworthy in an AI-first world—and the chance to sit at the high-trust intersection of Finance and GTM—are both genuine draws. I'd love to bring this rigor to your team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
