Dear C1 Team,

When I read your description—someone who loves bringing order to chaos, who jumps into startup problems as they arise, and who genuinely cares about candidate and employee experience—it felt like you were describing how I actually like to work. I'm based right here in Portland, I do my best work in person and alongside a team, and I'd be excited to help make the Portland office a welcoming, well-run place as C1 grows.

Coordination is the part of my work I enjoy most. As a Program Enablement Manager at InGenius Prep, I manage the end-to-end logistics for 20+ programs and 10+ vendors—juggling multiple calendars and moving pieces with the kind of accuracy this role calls for. (My current supervisor once called me the most organized person he's ever worked with, which I took as a real compliment.) I also care about the experience underneath the logistics: I established the cross-functional processes and documentation that helped 70+ people move in sync and cut our onboarding time by 75%, and I'm always looking for the small fixes that let a busy team scale without adding friction.

The candidate side of this role is familiar territory too. In my early recruiting work at Kronos Research, I drafted job descriptions, posted openings, coordinated with hiring teams, kept candidate data organized, and ran campus recruiting events and C-suite panels—and a warmer, more personal outreach approach helped grow applications by 566% in two months. I've handled the ATS and interview-coordination side of hiring (I have extensive hands-on experience in Greenhouse and pick up new systems quickly), and I know how much a thoughtful, well-organized candidate experience matters from first touch through offer.

I'll be honest about what draws me here: I'm less interested in a role I've already outgrown and more interested in being genuinely useful to a team that's building something. This role sits right at the intersection of the two things I'm best at—keeping complex logistics calm and organized, and caring about the people moving through them—and I'd love to do that in person, in Portland, as part of the C1rew. I'm also the kind of person who likes owning the celebrations and the small touches that make an office feel good to work in.

Thank you for reading. I'd welcome the chance to show how an organized, people-first approach could support both your hiring and your Portland office as you grow.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
