Dear Curai Health Team,

When I read that this role splits its time evenly between people operations and the systems that hold them together, I felt right at home. So much of good People work lives in that overlap—you can't improve the people experience if the data underneath it is messy, and you can't trust the data if the day-to-day operations around it aren't thoughtfully run. I've spent the last few years working in exactly that space, and I'd love to bring it to a team building something as meaningful as accessible, AI-powered primary care.

On the operations side, my work at InGenius Prep has me managing 20+ programs and 10+ vendors while building the guides and workflows that keep 70+ cross-functional staff aligned—work that cut onboarding time by 75%. That instinct to streamline a process rather than just maintain it is the same instinct I'd bring to onboarding, offboarding, payroll coordination, and rolling out new policies here. At Vestas, I optimized onboarding across three global locations by analyzing the process and clarifying responsibilities, so coordinating across an international, EOR-supported workforce is familiar territory.

On the systems and data side, I'm genuinely energized by keeping records accurate and turning them into something useful. With ODN Oregon I upskilled an HR team to audit 300+ leave cases and surface evidence on $362K in leave costs—work that depended on clean data and clear reporting, and that led to real policy redesigns. I'm comfortable across HRIS, ATS, and knowledge-management tools (including Notion, which I see you use), and I pick up new systems quickly when there's a reason to.

I should be upfront that I'd need H-1B sponsorship (via transfer), and I'd be glad to talk through the details early. I'm based in Portland and fully set up for remote work. Thank you for considering me—I'd welcome the chance to help Curai's people operations and systems grow together.

Warmly,

Jamie Cheng
