Dear Instacart Hiring Team,

A great new-hire orientation or performance-review cycle isn't just felt—it's built and measured. From my experience, it comes down to solid operational infrastructure: buttoned-up logistics, well-managed vendors, clear cross-functional communication, and a steady habit of documenting and improving what used to be manual. That's the work I love, and it's exactly why this People Experience Program Manager role drew me in—the chance to bring structure (and heart) to two of the highest-visibility moments in an employee's journey. I'm a People program manager with a master's in Applied Organizational Psychology, and I'd be excited to bring that to Instacart.

This is the core of what I do today. At InGenius Prep, I manage end-to-end lifecycles for 20+ programs and 10+ vendors—handling procurement, renewals, and ongoing partnership management—while keeping program logistics and operations running smoothly. I optimized and standardized cross-functional processes for 70+ staff that reduced onboarding time by 75%, and I run needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders (increasingly using AI tools) to keep improving how programs are designed and delivered.

Orientation and facilitation are familiar ground, too. At Vestas, I optimized onboarding for new hires across 3 global locations and facilitated an Inclusive Leadership workshop that scaled from 12 senior leaders to 23 locations—and I'll be candid that, like this role describes, I'm energized to keep honing my facilitation as a first touchpoint for new employees. At NextGen Healthcare, I analyzed 2,000+ employee experiences and turned the data into recommendations for the C-suite, so I keep the actual people experience—not just the process—at the center.

What ties it together is how I work, grounded in my background in organizational psychology (MS, USC): I use data collection and analysis to diagnose where a program actually breaks down, stakeholder partnership to design a cross-functional fix, and continued measurement to make sure each cycle runs more smoothly than the last. That's the operational excellence and care I'd love to bring to Instacart's People Experience team.

Warmly,

Jamie Cheng
