Dear Quantum Metric Hiring Team,

Great talent development is built on evidence—finding real capability gaps through data and stakeholder listening, designing programs that fit, and measuring whether people actually grow. That's the work I love, and it's why this Talent Development Manager role drew me in: the chance to design and scale an L&D and development portfolio at a company that's growing fast.

This is the core of what I do. At InGenius Prep, I manage 15-20+ learning programs and 8-10+ vendors, run needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders to identify capability gaps and design new programs, and facilitate training for 600+ participants at a 78% enrollment rate. At NextGen Healthcare, I led a manager effectiveness initiative, turning feedback data into development strategy, and analyzed 2,000+ employee experiences to guide leadership decisions. And at Vestas, I designed and piloted an Inclusive Leadership workshop that scaled from 12 leaders to 23 global locations—so building development programs that travel across an organization is exactly my wheelhouse.

What ties it together is a data-grounded, people-first approach rooted in my background in organizational psychology (MS, USC): I use stakeholder partnership and analytics to find what people need, design learning that sticks, and keep measuring impact. I'd be excited to bring that to Quantum Metric's talent team.

Warmly,

Jamie Cheng
