Dear Coherent People Team,

When I read the Employee Experience Specialist role, what struck me was how completely it mirrors the work I already love most: designing the programs that shape how people actually experience an organization, and grounding every one of them in real employee data rather than guesswork. Coherent builds the photonics and laser technology that quietly powers communications, manufacturing, and healthcare, and an engineering-driven company of that scale is exactly where a deliberate, evidence-based approach to engagement, recognition, and culture matters most. That intersection of people and systems thinking is where I do my best work.

My most directly relevant experience comes from NextGen Healthcare, where I analyzed 2,000+ employee survey responses to surface the real drivers of engagement and translated them into reports that guided C-suite decisions on where to focus. I led a manager-effectiveness initiative off that data and ran five cross-functional projects spanning survey development, rewards and recognition, and DEI and Inclusive Leadership training. At Vestas Wind Systems I built and launched a DEI pilot, starting with an Inclusive Leadership workshop for 12 senior leaders that was later scaled across 23 global locations, and I optimized onboarding across three locations along the employee lifecycle. In my current program-management role at InGenius Prep I run 20+ concurrent initiatives, designed the SOPs and knowledge base that cut onboarding time by 75%, and drove a 78% program enrollment rate, which is the design-launch-and-run-it muscle this role asks for.

I want to be straightforward about two things. First, I have roughly three years of experience, which sits at the entry of your 3-5 year range rather than the senior end, though the survey analysis, lifecycle, DEIB, and program work the role centers on is squarely what I have spent that time doing. Second, I am currently based in Portland and would be relocating to Santa Clara for this onsite role, which I am genuinely glad to do, and the ~25% travel is a welcome part of the work for me. I should also note transparently that I would require visa sponsorship to continue working in the US.

Beyond the fit on paper, I am drawn to Coherent because employee experience there is not a soft add-on; in a deeply technical, globally distributed company, the programs that build belonging and engagement are what hold the culture together. I would bring a survey-and-pulse-data habit of mind, real experience running recognition, wellness, onboarding, and DEIB programs, and the cross-functional partnership instincts to make them land with both HR and business leaders. I would be excited to help shape how Coherent's people experience their work.

Warm regards,

Jamie Cheng
