Dear Hiring Team,

Learning and development isn't just about delivering curriculum—from my experience, it's about understanding the specific learners in front of you, designing for their lived realities, and refining based on what actually moves the needle. With a background in HR, Organizational Development, and Program Management, I have helped organizations close real skill gaps, build onboarding infrastructure that reduced ramp-up time by 75%, and facilitate training webinars that reached 600+ participants across multiple countries. I look forward to bringing my needs assessment expertise, multilingual facilitation skills, and data-driven program design to Carlos Rosario as a Learning and Development Specialist.

My consulting work with Transition Projects Inc. involves diagnosing learning gaps and upskilling an HR team to audit 300+ leave cases—turning data into policy recommendations and building capacity in people who hadn't previously had those tools. At InGenius Prep, I designed onboarding materials that cut ramp-up time by 75%, conducted needs assessments with 25+ global stakeholders, and drove a 78% program enrollment rate across 15+ program launches.

What makes Carlos Rosario feel specifically right: I speak Mandarin Chinese natively and have spent my career working across cultures—adapting learning materials for audiences with different linguistic and professional backgrounds. The adult immigrant learner profile your institution serves mirrors the populations I've worked alongside throughout my career.

As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, I would welcome the chance to bring my skills in curriculum design, cross-cultural facilitation, and data-driven decision-making to your team. I'd be glad to relocate to DC for this role—the combination of mission alignment, confirmed H1B sponsorship, and exact-fit scope makes this an easy yes. Thank you for considering my application—I look forward to discussing how I can best contribute to Carlos Rosario!

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
