Dear OHSU Hiring Team,

Being a strong HR Business Partner means more than supporting a client group—it means diagnosing what's really happening in an organization, partnering with leaders to act on it, and tracking whether it worked. That's how I approach the work, and it's why this role at OHSU drew me in: the chance to bring data-grounded HR consultation to a mission-driven academic health system in my own community of Portland.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I worked directly as an HR Business Partner Assistant, supporting HR solutions across employee relations, headcount, and succession planning while partnering with leaders on their business priorities. I directed a Mergers & Acquisitions integration as organizational change, piloted an Inclusive Leadership workshop that scaled from 12 senior leaders to 23 global locations, and optimized onboarding across three sites through process analysis. This is the blend of employee relations, change management, talent development, and DEIB that OHSU's HRBP role centers on.

I pair that partner experience with a consultant's diagnostic discipline. At Organization Development Network (ODN) Oregon, I facilitate CEO and HR discovery interviews to diagnose engagement and absenteeism drivers, then upskill HR teams to turn data into executive-ready insights—on one engagement, surfacing $362K in leave costs that drove policy redesigns. At NextGen Healthcare, I analyzed 2,000+ employee experiences to guide C-suite decisions and consulted on performance review, inclusive leadership, and engagement strategy.

This is how I work, grounded in my background in organizational psychology (MS, USC): I use data and stakeholder partnership to understand where people and processes struggle, I help leaders design solutions that fit the organization, and I keep measuring to see whether they're working. I'd be honored to bring that to OHSU—an organization where the people function is genuinely a strategic lever for its mission.

Warmly,

Jamie Cheng
