Dear Accuris Hiring Team,

Great launches don't happen by accident—from my experience, they come from disciplined project planning, proactive risk surfacing, and the kind of cross-functional alignment that means every workstream knows what it owns before the Go/No-Go gate. That execution-focused mindset is what I bring to program management, and it's what drew me to the NPI Program Manager role at Accuris, where the work is exactly that: owning the lifecycle from intake to post-launch review so the product team can stay focused on direction.

At InGenius Prep, I managed end-to-end lifecycles for 20+ programs and 10+ vendors simultaneously—building the project plans, the tracking systems, and the SOPs that kept cross-functional teams (Sales, Operations, external vendors) coordinated at every stage. I launched 15+ programs from initial needs assessment through delivery, developing documentation that cut onboarding ramp-up time by 75% and conducting feedback loops that continuously refined how programs were positioned and executed. The coordination challenges weren't glamorous—they were milestone tracking, open-item closure, and making sure no workstream went quiet—but that's the work that makes launches land.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I directed a Mergers & Acquisitions project that required coordinating cross-functional stakeholders across teams and geographies to manage data migration and process integration during a period of organizational change. Separately, I streamlined onboarding processes across three global locations by conducting gap analyses, clarifying ownership across teams, and standardizing workflows—the same pattern of diagnosing where coordination breaks down and building the structure to fix it.

At NextGen Healthcare, I led a manager effectiveness initiative that translated 2,000+ employee responses into actionable data-driven reports for the C-suite, reinforcing that good program outcomes start with good diagnostic work. The ODN Oregon consulting engagement has deepened that instinct: I facilitate structured stakeholder discovery, quantify the cost of process gaps, and design accountability structures to track progress toward measurable targets.

My MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC, 3.95 GPA) shapes how I work at every stage: I diagnose what's actually broken through data collection and structured interviews, propose cross-functional solutions through stakeholder collaboration, and track key metrics to confirm progress is real. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, Accuris's focus on engineering-workflow technology and the operational complexity of coordinating Marketing, Legal, CX, Engineering, and Sales Enablement around a shared launch calendar are both draws. I'm excited to bring this approach to the NPI Program Manager role.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
