Dear University of Oregon Hiring Team,

Global engagement programming isn't just about logistics—from my experience, it's about creating bridges between people, cultures, and ideas through programs built on evidence, continuous dialogue with stakeholders, and a genuine commitment to cross-cultural inclusion. With a background spanning international program coordination, cross-cultural team collaboration across the US, Taiwan, and Scandinavia, and a deep passion for education as a lever for human development, I'm excited to bring that combination to the University of Oregon as a Global Engagement Programs Coordinator.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I worked across international contexts on people programs with real global stakes: piloting an Inclusive Leadership workshop for 12 senior leaders that was later scaled to 23 global locations, directing a cross-functional Mergers & Acquisitions project overseeing stakeholders across multiple countries, and optimizing onboarding across three international sites. Working in a Danish multinational with teams in Taiwan and across the Asia-Pacific region gave me firsthand fluency in how culture shapes communication, program design, and the definition of success—something I would bring directly to global engagement work at UO.

At InGenius Prep, I managed the full coordination lifecycle for 15+ educational programs with 8+ vendors—collaborating with cross-functional teams on delivery strategy, conducting needs assessments and interviews with 25+ global stakeholders to ensure programs were genuinely aligned with participant needs, and developing learning materials that reduced onboarding time by 75% for 70+ staff. I facilitated training webinars for 600+ participants, achieving a 78% client conversion rate. Coordinating international programming at scale, keeping diverse stakeholders aligned, and using feedback loops to continuously improve—those were the connective tissue of the role.

At NextGen Healthcare, I analyzed 2,000+ employee data points to surface insights that guided C-suite decisions on engagement and L&D strategy, and contributed to five cross-functional projects spanning survey development, DEI training, and performance programming. Translating data into actionable direction for diverse stakeholder groups gave me a clear appreciation for the diagnostic side of program coordination—not just running programs, but constantly asking whether they're landing.

My approach is grounded in my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology (USC) and a BA in Psychology and Education Studies (Wesleyan)—which together trained me to treat program coordination as a system: diagnose needs through data, design solutions with stakeholders, and measure impact to improve. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, the University of Oregon's commitment to global learning and the opportunity to help international students and scholars navigate meaningful transitions are both genuine draws. I'd love to bring this methodology to your team.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
