Dear Hiring Team,

Learning programs don't work just because they're well-organized—from my experience, what makes them actually land is a close look at real learning needs through data and stakeholder input, then continuous refinement through cross-functional collaboration. With a background spanning program operations, organizational development, and learning facilitation, I've spent my career doing exactly that: diagnosing where people get stuck, building the materials and logistics to close those gaps, and tracking whether anything actually changed. I'm excited to bring that foundation to the Learning team at Chartis as an Associate, Learning.

At InGenius Prep, I managed the end-to-end execution of 20+ learning programs serving a global audience—from coordinating vendor logistics to facilitating webinars for 600+ participants and developing the guides, workflows, and onboarding materials that helped 70+ cross-functional staff use what we built. I also conducted needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders to identify learning gaps and inform three new program designs, which drove a 78% client conversion rate. Good learning operations isn't just scheduling—it's building systems people trust and tracking whether they work.

At NextGen Healthcare, I supported a firmwide L&D and engagement strategy by analyzing 2,000+ employee responses to surface satisfaction drivers and capability gaps. I collaborated across five cross-functional projects—survey development, rewards & recognition, DEI training, and performance review—translating data into actionable recommendations for C-suite decisions, working right at the intersection of data and people.

At Vestas Wind Systems, I helped design and pilot an Inclusive Leadership workshop for 12 senior leaders that was later scaled to 23 global locations, and optimized onboarding processes across three locations through gap analyses and clearer role definitions. Coordinating across a global HR team built exactly the logistical and interpersonal foundation this role's firmwide communication and in-person program support require.

I approach learning work the way my MS in Applied Organizational Psychology trained me to approach any people problem: diagnose real learning needs through data and stakeholder input, collaborate cross-functionally to design the right solution, then track learning metrics to ensure the program builds capability—not just fills seats. That lens is what I bring to every LMS audit, webinar, and learning initiative I touch. As an analytical organizer with a growth mindset, the scope of Chartis's firmwide learning function and the chance to contribute from day one are both strong draws. Thank you for considering my application—I look forward to the conversation.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
