Dear Cambia Health Solutions Hiring Team,

The Community and Culture Program Manager role at Cambia is one of the clearest fits I've come across in my search. The core of the work—supporting ERG communities, coordinating culture programs and employee events, and connecting employee engagement to broader organizational purpose—maps almost exactly to what I've been doing, just in a different setting.

My current consulting work with Organization Development Network (ODN) Oregon is, at its heart, ERG and community program management for a professional network. Our team coordinates member events and programming, supports volunteer leaders across the state, and maintains the infrastructure that keeps a practitioner community connected and growing. The challenge is familiar: keeping community-building work from feeling transactional, making sure members feel seen and not just administered. It's the same instinct this role calls for, and I find I'm good at it.

At InGenius Prep, I've run end-to-end logistics for 20+ programs involving multiple internal teams, vendors, and external stakeholders. I manage communications cycles, coordinate scheduling, build documentation to keep distributed teams aligned, and regularly facilitate training sessions for 600+ participants. I've also conducted listening sessions with 25+ global stakeholders to surface unmet needs and feed those findings into program design. What I take from that work is a real appreciation for the operational details that either make community programming feel cohesive or let it quietly fall apart.

My background in Organizational Psychology (MS, USC) gives me grounding in how belonging actually develops—and how superficial programs tend to miss it. I've also done direct HRBP work, including piloting an Inclusive Leadership workshop at Vestas that was later scaled to 23 global locations. I know how culture and inclusion show up (or don't) in the talent lifecycle, not just in standalone events. Cambia's Portland office is five miles from my apartment, so the hybrid schedule is genuinely workable. I'd love to talk about the role.

Sincerely,

Jamie Cheng
