Dear Hiring Team,

A new hire's first weeks tell them, quietly, how much an organization actually cares—and I love being the person who makes that answer an easy yes. That's exactly why the People Operations Coordinator role at Cursor caught my eye: owning the new hire experience end-to-end, keeping the behind-the-scenes HR machinery accurate, and being a warm, reliable point of contact is the kind of work I genuinely enjoy and am good at.

I'm a list-checker and a people-lover in equal measure. At Vestas, I optimized onboarding across three global locations by mapping the process and clarifying who owned what, so new hires arrived to clarity instead of confusion. At InGenius Prep, I currently coordinate 20+ programs and 10+ vendors and built guides and workflows for 70+ cross-functional staff that cut onboarding time by 75%—coordinating that many moving pieces has taught me to catch the detail before it becomes a problem and to keep communication warm and timely while I do.

Accurate people data matters to me, too. I've worked hands-on in HRIS systems including Rippling, and I'm the kind of person who double-checks the date, notices when something doesn't look right, and resolves it before it drifts downstream. Through ODN Oregon I've also upskilled an HR team to audit 300+ leave cases and present executive-ready insights, so I appreciate firsthand how much good decisions depend on data being right in the first place.

I thrive in ambiguity, default to figuring it out, and handle sensitive information the way people trust me to. I'd love to bring that mix of follow-through and warmth to the team and to every person who joins Cursor.

Warmly,

Jamie Cheng
