Dear Modal Hiring Team,

The People Operations work I love most is the kind your team is doing right now: building the foundations, not just maintaining them. Clean onboarding that sets people up to succeed, self-service resources so employees always feel supported even when no one's in the room, and processes documented well enough to scale with a fast-growing company. With Modal crossing $300M+ ARR and growing fivefold, that's exactly the moment I'd want to step into.

I've spent my career building these foundations from the ground up. At InGenius Prep, I manage the operations of 20+ programs and 10+ vendors, and I built the guides and workflows for 70+ cross-functional staff that cut onboarding time by 75%. At Vestas Wind Systems, I optimized onboarding across three global locations by mapping the process and clarifying responsibilities, and helped steer a complex M&A transition across stakeholders. And at Organization Development Network (ODN) Oregon, I worked alongside an HR team to turn 300+ leave cases and $362K in costs into evidence that drove real policy redesigns—the kind of careful, accurate people-data work your role calls for.

What ties it together is a systems-minded, people-first approach grounded in my background in organizational psychology (MS, USC): I like being the reliable first point of contact, keeping the details straight under competing priorities, and writing things down clearly so the whole team can move faster. I'd be excited to bring that to Modal's People team in New York.

Warmly,

Jamie Cheng
