Dear CLEAR L&D Team,

When I read the Learning & Development Generalist posting, I recognized the role immediately—not because I've done something adjacent to it, but because it maps almost exactly onto work I do right now. Coordinating training logistics, building facilitator guides and job aids, running needs assessments, facilitating sessions, and keeping everything organized across stakeholders: this is my day-to-day. CLEAR's mission of frictionless, secure experiences resonates with me deeply—I believe that clear systems and well-supported frontline teams are what make that kind of seamless experience possible for members.

At InGenius Prep, I serve as the central coordinator for our training and enablement function. I've run needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders, facilitated training sessions for 600+ participants (driving a 78% enrollment rate), and built the SOPs, facilitator guides, and self-service knowledge base that our 70+ staff rely on. I manage 20+ concurrent programs and keep detailed records across vendors, schedules, and delivery milestones—so the "administrative precision" your posting mentions isn't a stretch for me; it's what I pride myself on. I also have hands-on experience with LMS platforms including Canvas and Moodle, and use Google Workspace daily across all of this work.

Before InGenius, I facilitated an Inclusive Leadership workshop for 12 senior leaders at Vestas Wind Systems that was later expanded to 23 global locations—and during my OD internship at NextGen Healthcare, I contributed to five cross-functional L&D projects including survey design and learning program development. I'm genuinely energized when I'm in a room (or on a call) with learners. As a 97% extrovert, facilitation is where I do my best work, and I'd welcome the 40% travel component of this role as an opportunity to build real relationships with the field teams I'd be supporting.

What draws me specifically to CLEAR is the combination of scale, mission-alignment, and the clear through-line between training quality and frontline performance. I'd love to bring my coordination and facilitation experience to your Airport Operations Training team and help ensure that every CLEAR employee—wherever they're located—receives a consistent, high-quality learning experience.

Warm regards,

Jamie Cheng
