Dear Core & Main Learning Team,

There's something deeply satisfying about owning a training program end-to-end—designing it around real learner needs, facilitating the sessions yourself, watching someone move from "I don't get this yet" to confident and ready. That's exactly what drew me to the Operations & Learning Specialist role. The chance to lead the Texas Trainee Development Program from onboarding through readiness milestones, with full accountability for curriculum, coaching cadence, and program analytics, is exactly the kind of ownership I've been building toward.

At InGenius Prep, I do this kind of work daily. I started by running needs assessments with 25+ stakeholders to identify actual learning gaps, then designed three programs from scratch—facilitator guides, participant materials, and job aids—and delivered training to 600+ participants, reaching a 78% enrollment rate. I own the full cycle: from curriculum design to learning analytics (completion rates, feedback trends, assessment results) to process refinement when something isn't working. I also built a self-service knowledge base of 70+ SOPs and guides that cut onboarding time by 75%, which taught me how much good performance support materials matter beyond the classroom. I'm familiar with adult learning principles and instructional design methodology, and I've grown to love the diagnostic side—figuring out why someone isn't performing yet, then building the right intervention to close the gap.

On the facilitation side, I've led both virtual and in-person sessions. At Vestas, I designed and facilitated an Inclusive Leadership workshop for 12 senior leaders—a program that was later expanded to 23 global locations. I thrive in front of a group; as a 97% extrovert, developing people face-to-face is genuinely energizing for me, not just a job task. At NextGen Healthcare, I contributed to L&D initiatives by designing survey instruments to assess manager-effectiveness gaps, then translating those insights into presentations for senior leadership. Coaching and structured feedback (1:1s, skill observation, gap identification) are skills I apply regularly and want to deepen further in a dedicated L&D role.

I'm based in Portland, OR, and excited about the opportunity to relocate or work closely with the Texas team. The idea of supporting sales trainees who are still figuring out their craft, building a clear readiness progression, and being the person who closes the gap between onboarding and productivity—that's work I find genuinely meaningful. I'd love to bring that same energy to Core & Main.

Warm regards,

Jamie Cheng
