Dear People & Culture Team,

There's something meaningful about an organization that has spent over a century connecting people to wildlife—and now asks its People & Culture team to bring that same sense of purpose to the employees who make it happen. When I came across the HR Advisor role at Woodland Park Zoo, I felt that alignment immediately. I care deeply about workplaces where people are genuinely supported, heard, and set up to do their best work. That's the through-line in everything I've done in HR and organizational development, and it's why I'd love to bring it here.

My hands-on experience with employee relations and compliance is rooted in my time as an HR Business Partner Assistant at Vestas Wind Systems. I assisted directly in employee relations cases—navigating discipline, conflict, and sensitive situations while ensuring alignment with local labor laws, company policy, and confidentiality requirements. I also optimized onboarding across three global locations and led a DEI and Inclusive Leadership pilot that expanded from 12 senior leaders to 23 global locations. That experience gave me firsthand appreciation for how much ER, policy, and inclusive-workplace practices are intertwined—and how getting them right takes both structure and care.

On the policy and organizational diagnosis side, I've been consulting with Organization Development Network (ODN) Oregon, where I analyzed 300+ leave cases to surface $362K in hidden costs for a nonprofit, then partnered with their HR and leadership teams to redesign the policies driving those trends. It's the kind of work I find genuinely satisfying: digging into root causes, translating data into practical recommendations, and helping organizations build systems that actually work for their people. At NextGen Healthcare, I used 2,000+ employee data points to present evidence-based insights on manager effectiveness, DEI, and performance review practices to senior leadership—reinforcing my belief that good HR advice is grounded in both data and empathy.

I'm a curious, solutions-oriented collaborator who builds trust quickly across different kinds of stakeholders—from frontline staff to executives. I'd welcome the chance to bring that energy to Woodland Park Zoo's People & Culture team, supporting the employees who show up every day to advance conservation.

Warm regards,

Jamie Cheng
